            D                                     A      A7
D
  Oh flower of scotland, when will we see yer like again
G               D               A        A7         D
That fought and died for yer wee bit hill and glen
                                G         D
That stood against him, proud edward`s army
     G        D           C      D
And sent him homeward to think again

D                                 A           A7      D
The hills are bare now and autumn leaves lie thick and still
      G            D               A          A7   D
For a land that is lost now, which those so dearly held

                                G         D
That stood against him, proud edward`s army
     G        D           C      D
And sent him homeward to think again

D                                 A         A7    D
Those days are past now and in the past they must remain
    G            D            A         A7   D
But we can still rise now and be the nation again
                                G         D
That stood against him, proud edward`s army
     G        D           C      D
And sent him homeward to think again
