   F                C                Dm                 Am
Go on with your song, bird            you can't go wrong bird
B           F                        Gm             C
you will go on and on, bird,      like you did before F                   C          Dm              Am
though your wings are broken,        the sky is  so wide open
B               F                  Gm           F
and the wind is waiting for you     like an open door

Dm               A              F                       G
though you go so far away,     your voice will still be heard
so well
       B              F                      Gm              A
you'll never really,  ever know,  how beautiful,  you are---
Dm                A                F                    G
when the moon is on the rise,  i'll try to make my songbird
fly
  B             F                       Gm                F
I wonder if he ever will     and if he really did,    how far--

F                C                Dm                  Am
Go on with your song, bird            you can't go wrong bird
B           F                        Gm             C
you will go on and on, bird,      like you did before

so well
       B              F                      Gm              A
you'll never really,  ever know,  how beautiful,  you are---
Dm                A                F                    G
when the moon is on the rise,  i'll try to make my songbird
fly
  B             F                       Gm                F
I wonder if he ever will     and if he really did,    how far--

F                C                Dm                 Am
Go on with your song, bird            you can't go wrong bird
B           F                        Gm             C
you will go on and on, bird,      like you did before F                   C          Dm              Am
though your wings are broken,        the sky is  so wide open
B           F                        Gm             F
you will go on and on, bird,      like you did before Gm              F (1 strum)
like you did before
