                                                               Pulling out the papers from the drawers that slide smooth
Looking down on empty streets, all she can see
                                                                                       Gbm
                                                               Tugging at the darkness, word upon word
         Α
                                    Gbm
Are the dreams all made solid, are the dreams made real
                                                               Dbm
                                                               Confessing all the secret things in the warm velvet box
Dbm
All of the buildings, all of the cars
                                                                                                     Gbm
                                                               To the priest-he's the doctor, he can handle the shocks
     Α
                          Gbm
Were once just a dream in somebody's head
                                                                  Dbm
                                                               Dreaming of the tenderness-the tremble in the hips
 Dbm
She pictures the broken glass, pictures the steam
                                                                                 R
                                                               Of kissing Mary's lips
                        Gbm
