

Sleeping At Last - Earth

But I put it out of my mind
                           tom:
               B (forma dos acordes no tom de G )
Capostraste na 4ª casa
                                                               Long enough to call it courage
                                                               To live without a lifeline
             Gbm
I dig 'til my shovel tells a secret
                                                               I bend the definition
                                                               Of faith to exonerate my blind eye
Swear to the earth that I will keep it
Brush off the dirt
                                                               'Til the sirens sound, I'm safe
And let my change of heart occur
                                                               Gbm
                                                                There was an earthquake
Sold soon after the appraisal
                                                                 There was an avalanche of change
The hammer struck the auction table
                                                                We were so afraid
Louder than anything I've ever heard
                                                                 We cried ourselves a hurricane
                                                                There were floods
Fault lines tremble underneath my glass house
                                                               And tidal waves over us
But I put it out of my mind
                                                               We folded our hands and prayed
Long enough to call it courage
                                                                Like a domino
To live without a lifeline
                                                               These wildfires grow and grow
I bend the definition
                                                               Until a brand new world takes shape
Of faith to exonerate my blind eye
                                                               (E Dbm D E)
'Til the sirens sound, I'm safe
                                                               Fault lines tremble underneath my glass house
Meanwhile, my family's taking shelter
                                                               But I put it out of my mind
The sparks send the fire down the wire
                                                               Long enough to call it courage
A countdown begins
                                                               To live without a lifeline
Until the dynamite gives in
                                                               I bend the definition
                                                               Of faith to exonerate my blind eye
The echo, as wide as the equator
Travels through a world of built up anger
                                                               'Til the sirens sound, I'm safe
Too late to pull itself together now
                                                               'Til the sirens sound, I'm safe
                                                               'Til the sirens sound, I'm safe
Fault lines tremble underneath my glass house
                                                               (DEDE)
